The Bill Superfoot Wallace seminar was held Friday at Wang's Martial Arts. There was a separate class for both adults and children. 60 plus students attended as well as family and friends watching. Mr. Superfoot wowed the audience with fast unavoidable kicks. He kept the kids engaged with lively presentation. Everyone got a good stretch and fun workout. Superfoot signed coloring books and posed for photos.

Sunflower Power

By Kathleen Engel (Article from Better Nutrition)

This tiny seed-and its various butters, flours, and oils-boasts a host of health benefits

For folks with peanut allergies—or any peanut butter lover who wants to mix things up a little—sunflower seed butter is an option worth tasting. On its own or blended with omega-3 rich flaxseeds, it's a delicious way to safely enjoy nut butter. It can be substituted in nearly any peanut butter snack, as well as in place of a good ol' PB&J in a kid's lunch box. And for those with wheat allergies, sunflower seed flours and milks offer a great alternative.

Sunflower seeds are high in polyunsaturated oil, an omega-6 fat which, when consumed in a 2:1 or 1:1 balance with omega-3 fat, helps lower cholesterol. In fact, a recently published study in the Journal of the American Medical Association reports that a diet that includes plant sterols (such as those found in sunflower seeds), fiber, nuts, and soy protein helps reduce LDL cholesterol levels better than simply cutting back on saturated fat.

Sunflower seed products are also excellent sources of other nutrients: Vitamin E supports brain function, keeps arteries healthy, and reduces risk of heart attack. Magnesium regulates blood pressure and muscle and nerve function, aids bone health, and boosts immunity. Folate helps build and protect DNA and keeps homocysteine levels in check. Tryptophan supports sleep and mood. Vitamin B5 (pantothenic acid) promotes healthy skin, mood, and energy. Phosphorus regulates nutrient use and boosts energy. Manganese and copper fight free radicals. And selenium helps block oxidative damage.

Sunflower seeds also contain both soluble and insoluble fiber, which together fight diabetes, cardiovascular disease, and cancer. Plus, they feature a wide array of amino acids.

Enjoying these health benefits is simple. Sunflower oil is great for cooking and is excellent in salad dressings. Sunflower flour offers a fantastic gluten-free way to bake. You can also simply eat the seeds straight out of the bag or add them to some of your favorites. For instance, a handful (quarter cup) of seeds on your salad or oatmeal adds nearly 4 grams of fiber and 6 grams of protein to your meal.

A word of caution: The sunflower seed oil you find in mainstream supermarkets is usually a refined product. Refined oils undergo heat processing, which damages the oil's structure, causes unhealthy trans fats to form, and robs the oil of important nutrients including conjugated linoleic acid (CLA) and lignans—both potent cancer fighters. Unrefined sunflower seed products, such as many found in health food stores, leave the seed's nutrients intact, retaining the health benefits.

Hot Tea

By Lisa Turner (Article from Better Nutrition)

What's new in the world of this timeless beverage

We may love coffee, but tea is still the classic choice: last year, Americans spent almost $8 billion on iced and hot teas, and people around the world have been sipping the legendary beverage for thousands of years. Maybe that's why you see so many varieties, ranging from delicate white teas to robust black versions to spicy herbal blends.

But no matter the name, tea is tea. Well, mostly. Except for the various herbal varieties, all teas come from the Camellia sinensis, a shrub that's native to China and Southeast Asia. Variations in color, strength, and flavor depend on how the plant is grown, harvested, and processed.

7 Reasons to Switch to Tea

As card-carrying members of the coffee generation, we're not here to slam the bean. But tea does have a few benefits that coffee lacks:

1. It's lower in caffeine. A cup of brewed coffee contains 110—180 mg of caffeine. A cup of strong black tea rarely tops 60 mg, and green tea is even lower.
2. It protects against cancer. A recent review of studies found that tea slowed tumor growth in cancers of the skin, lungs, mouth, esophagus, stomach, liver, pancreas, small intestine, colon, and prostate.
3. You'll have more choices. Even different roasts and blends of coffee taste pretty similar. But there's a world of difference between a delicate jasmine green and a robust smoky Lapsang Souchong.
4. It could make you slimmer. In one study, people who drank two cups of black, green, or oolong tea per week had 20 percent less body fat than non-tea drinkers.
5. It's good for your heart. Studies have shown that tea helps reduce both overall and LDL cholesterol. And it lowers blood pressure.
6. It's cheaper. Even pricey brands average out to fewer bucks per cup than similar qualities of coffee.
7. You'll get fewer cavities. Teas contain compounds that kill bacteria in the mouth, which helps prevent tooth decay.
